

Factory Farming

CAMPAIGN

Working to reduce the suffering of animals raised for meat, eggs, and milk

THE HUMANE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES

No Battery Eggs
Think Outside the Crate
Force-Fed Abuse
Petition for Poultry
Humane Eating
:: Campaigns
:: Victories
:: About Farm Animals
:: Resources
:: News & Press
:: Multimedia
:: Legislation
:: Litigation
:: Donate
:: About Us

FREE

Vegetarian Recipes

Browse The HSUS
Farm Animal Welfare
Research Library.

Don't miss Taking Action for Animals

July 19-21, 2008
Arlington, Virginia

HSUS >> Factory Farming >> News and Press >> News

Guckenheimer Serves Up a Cage-Free Egg Policy

February 12, 2007

Guckenheimer, one of the largest private, U.S.-owned food service companies in the nation, has joined the rapidly growing movement away from battery cage confinement of egg-laying hens.

The Redwood Shores, Calif.-based company, which serves meals to nearly two million customers daily in almost half of U.S. states, began its phase-in of buying cage-free eggs exclusively from producers that are third-party-audited by Humane Farm Animal Care.

©null

null

"The Humane Society commends Guckenheimer for its leadership in the growing movement away from eggs from caged hens," said Paul Shapiro, Factory Farming Campaign director for The HSUS. "By implementing an exclusively cage-free egg policy, Guckenheimer has set a positive example for other socially responsible companies to follow."

Policy Helps Hens

Egg-laying hens confined in battery cages have so little space they are unable to spread their wings or walk, let alone engage in other important natural behaviors such as nesting, foraging, perching and dust bathing. Each caged hen has less floor space than a single letter-sized sheet of paper on which to live, leading to extremely high levels of stress and frustration.

Guckenheimer is in good company. A growing number of schools and companies are moving away from eggs from caged hens. More than 100 schools across the country—including Berkeley, Stanford, University of Wisconsin-Madison and Georgetown—have enacted policies to eliminate or greatly reduce their use of eggs from caged hens.

National retailers such as Whole Foods Market and Wild Oats Natural Marketplace refuse to carry battery cage eggs. Trader Joe's has switched its private-line eggs to cage-free. Ben & Jerry's is phasing out the use of battery cage eggs. Even companies such as AOL and Google have ended the use of cage eggs in their employee cafeterias.

Shapiro added, "The writing is on the wall: Companies concerned about social responsibility are flocking away from battery cage eggs."

 E-MAIL THIS PAGE

PRINTER FRIENDLY

See the Video

 Battery-Cage Eggs

Related Links

 'No Battery Eggs' Campaign Exposes the Hard-Boiled Truth about Laying Hens

 Egg-Laying Hens Photo Gallery

 Scientists and Experts on Battery Cages and Laying Hen Welfare